Definitions/Notes:

Material Cost: Material Cost is the cost of the materials as it would appear on the manufacturer or distributor's invoice to the contractor or subcontractor, does not include labor or equipment costs associated with the installation of the materials.

Post-Consumer Recycled Content: Material or finished product that has served its intended consumer use and has been discarded by the consumer for recovery after the consumer has employed the intended use of the product. (e.g., a plastic bottle from a soft drink).

Pre-Consumer Recycled Content: Portion of material or product which are derived from recovered industrial materials that are diverted from municipal solid waste for use in a different manufacturing process. Note that spills and scraps from the original manufacturing process that are combined with other constituents reprocessing for use in further production of the same product do not qualify.

Manufacture Location: Manufacturing, as defined by the USGBC, refers to the final assembly of components into a building product that is furnished and installed by the tradesmen. For example, if the hardware comes from Seoul, South Korea, the lumber from Vancouver, BC and the joist is assembled in Kent, Washington, then the location of the final assembly is Kent, Washington.

Raw Resources: Raw resources refers to the origin of building product components in regard to the location from which they are extracted, harvested or recovered.

FSC Certified: FSC Certified refers to Certification from the Forest Stewardship Council. This column is only applicable to wood products.

Backup Documentation includes cut sheets, letter from manufacturer, etc.

CONTRACTOR CERTIFICATION: I, _____, a duly authorized representative of _____, hereby certify that the material information contained herein is an accurate representation of the material qualifications to be provided by us, as components of the final building construction. Furthermore, I understand that any change in such qualifications during the purchasing period will require prior written approval from the Construction Manager and Owner.
